York: Farrar, Straus & Giroux. 1998. At his best, Kurzweil can be an ingenious visionary. I will not let my anti-Kurzweil bias get in the way. This is the book in which Stephen Hawking (along with Kurzweil) put forth the notion that our intelligence will grow exponentially until we transcend biological limits in the second half of this century. This is not the first time Kurzweil has predicted the imminent "Singularity." And to be fair, he is correct about many things--our computer technology and the quest for faster silicon processors is rapidly approaching the theoretical limits for Moore's Law. I'm also not anti-technology, so I am willing to cut Kurzweil some slack. The problem is that Kurzweil's theories are, quite simply, disconnected from reality. Kurzweil's Singularity represents the biggest version of "peak stuff." It suggests we will enter a new era of technology in which the development of tools becomes so rapid and easy to achieve that our work becomes nearly painless. We humans will be transformed into a new and unimaginable species. Even if we don't believe in Kurzweil's singularity, it is a fact that many people do believe in it. And Kurzweil sells many people on his singularity. But Kurzweil is not the only person talking about a "singularity" of technology. Carl Sagan was talking about it in 1980, and Kurzweil cribbed heavily from him. Sagan said the book "The Dragons of Eden" contained the seeds of "The Singularity" (p. 25 of Kurzweil's book). Kurzweil says he talked about the Singularity with Sagan, which is possible. But if they did talk, Sagan is probably not one of those people who spent his career saying things like, "space explorers will someday visit planets that possess intelligent life-forms which are several orders of magnitude more advanced than ours" (p. 75 of The Dragons of Eden). Kurzweil is indeed a visionary. What
